

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A site securement device for use in medical infusion therapy to selectively and temporarily retain a section of intravascular (IV) tube. The present device includes a unitary body with uniform or non-uniform channels for temporarily receiving and retaining a section of IV tubing in one or more channels, and may include an adhesive pad attached thereto for easy attachment to the skin of a patient.